I was only 31 years old when I was diagnosed with breast cancer. What? How could this happen to me? I was super healthy and there is no history in my family. The journey was HARD. I had weekly appointments and got a really cool “swag bag” with chemo essentials that was comforting. I was always worried how others would perceive me. I met Xavier Woods one day and we were talking of my journey. He told me to be myself and he was the first person (besides family) I showed my bald head to, took the wig off! I felt free and comfortable and he was a big part in that. I would never say “I’m glad this happened to me”, but it really changed my life and a lot of good came out of it. 1.5 years later and I’m healthier than ever!

My identical twin sister was diagnosed with breast cancer. She went through chemo and lost all of her hair. We didn't look like twins anymore insert sad face here Had it been me, I don't think I could've gone through it. I took her to a comic con where The New Day were guests. She was feeling too sick from the treatments to attend their meet and greet, which crushed her. Upon seeing that WWE was coming to our town, I messaged Austin (Xavier Woods) and he hooked us up with tickets and shirts and we had the time of our lives. He constantly checked in during her treatment to see how she was.. even more than our own friends did! She now educates our friends on screenings and mammograms because while we are young, no one is immune. She has now kicked cancer's ass and is healthier than ever.
